Odd Collection Disposal Poses Treasury Puzzle

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Among other things, the treasury department is fussing over what to do with one 10 karat collar button and three hairpins.

Items such as these are about to crowd the money out of the government's huge vault in the treasury building basement.

The stuff was turned over to the treasury as unclaimed by the state department. For safe keeping.

Most of it originally belonged to Americans who were living in foreign countries. When nobody showed up to claim it, it was given to the American diplomatic representatives. They shipped it to the state department.

The treasury would like to do something about it, but can't. There is no law which would allow it to hold a public auction on the huge stacks of German marks from before World War I or Russian rubles.

Secretary Helpless

Secretary of the Treasury Snyder is as helpless as the next one. For one thing, he doesn't even know the combination to the safes. W. R. Julian, the treasurer of the United States, knows how the locks work, but he's not talking.

Anyhow, to get back to buttons and hairpins.

In 1936 the state department sent a small boy over to the treasury under heavy guard with a large envelope, along with a little note stating that the owner could not be located.

The treasury people opened the folder and found one pair of horn rimmed spectacles with gold mountings in a black case; one cuff button; one collar button; one woman's handbag containing a pair of manicure scissors, one gold earring, a gold ring and a Cuban coin worth about a nickel; a rusty .22 caliber revolver that wouldn't shoot and a cheap watch, junior size, that wouldn't run.

The three hairpins turned up in another packet, which came from Yokohama, Japan.

Articles Pile Up

As the years go on, such things pile up and gather dust in the dark, massive vaults.

The collection goes back a long way. One letter on file tells of a flock of bonds captured in Louisiana in 1865 and turned over to the treasury for "safe keeping." They are still there. The letter says the bonds, payable to the city of New Orleans, were worth at the time $4,476,960 and were captured at Shreveport July 12, 1865, by Gen. Philip Sherman.

There are a lot of curios in the vaults. One is a gold medal which was supposed to have gone to a man who did a lot of heroic work in fighting an epidemic of yellow fever in the tropics. The name of the man isn't on the record, but the medal inscribed to "An Unsung Hero" was turned over to the vault keepers.

The buttons and medals and bonds keep coming in. The treasury is about to throw in the sponge —or move to a larger building.

Pope Says Apostle Peter Buried in "Eternal City"

ROME — Pope Pius, in an address to 6,000 Rome students, said that the burial place of the Apostle Peter "is and was under the cupola of St. Peter's Church."

Archaeological findings "demonstrate that," the Pontiff said.

It had been anticipated that the Pope, sooner or later, would affirm the truth of the tradition that St. Peter, martyred in Rome, was buried on the site of the world's largest Christian church.

However, he had been expected to delay the disclosure until sometime during the Holy Year, opening next Christmas Eve.

The Pope made his statement about St. Peter's burial place quite casually, in the course of an address, whose topic was the duty of the young to prepare themselves for "responsible offices" in later age.

He urged upon the students the study of Latin—"not a dead tongue but the key that opens the fountains of history"—as of Italian and other modern languages.

Neighbors' Charity Puts Postmistress Out of Job

WALES, WIS. — Her neighbors' charity has put Postmistress Mrs. Hazel B. Mason right out of a job.

The residents of this Waukesha county village have sent so many relief packages to Europe that post office receipts have gone over the $1,500 per year limit set for fourth class post offices.

That pushes Wales up to third class and automatically vacates the postmaster's position. It must be filled through a competitive civil service examination.

Mrs. Mason, who has been postmistress for 19 years, had to send to the town newspaper a notice that her position is open and examination will be held. However, she can take the examination herself and there's a good chance there will be no contest.

Great Britain Relaxes Curb On Purchases of Clothing

LONDON. — The biggest relaxation since clothing rationing began in Britain nearly eight years ago will enable a man or woman to buy a new suit or dress from now on without coupons.

Harold Wilson, president of the board of trade, making this announcement in commons, said this improvement, with the freeing of footwear and other changes made last year, meant about half of the clothing field now was off the ration.

The relaxation will apply to all woven wool cloth and garments made from it, such as trousers, jackets, overcoats, skirts, dresses and children's wear.

The minister made other changes, such as having the coupon rate for fur garments, and indicated further improvements might be made later. He said better production of wool had made the changes possible, but that cotton cloth still was in short supply. For that reason there will be no relief in the household linen situation or in men's shirts.

Scrapping of Rivets Speeds Naval Aircraft Production

One way in which the production of millitary and naval aircraft may be tremendously speeded, at reduced cost, while at the same time increasing the structural strength of aircraft was pointed out at the annual meeting of the American Welding society.

The process would involve the scrapping of almost countless rivets, bolts and nuts, and assembling the parts by fusing them together through the use of "resistance welding"—a process in which the parts are merely pressed together, and an electric current is passed through them for a fraction of a second.

The process, according to Prof. A. R. Hard of Washington State college, produces a joint that is over 30 per cent stronger than the riveted joints used mainly up to now in the production of military and naval aircraft.

General adoption of the process for aircraft production, it was admitted, would mean a virtual revolution in manufacturing methods for military and naval aircraft, particularly in view of the tremendously higher assembly speeds possible.

DOUBLE WEDDING

A double wedding ceremony was performed at the Parsonage of Memorial Methodist Church at 7 o'clock Friday evening when Miss Hazel Wooldridge becam ethe bride of Cpl. Robert Allen Guill and Miss Ruth Guill was married to Fred C. Smith. The Rev. Cecil G. Carter and the Rev. R. Carl Maxwell officiated.

Miss Guill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Herman Guill, was dressed in a navy blue suit and wore a corsage of baby orchids.

Miss Wooldridge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Wooldridge wore a grey gabardine suit with navy accessories. Her shoulder corsage was of red rose buds.

Mr. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Smith, of Richlands, served as a lieutenant in World War II, and is now a student at the Medical College of Virginia at Richmond.

Cpl. Guill, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Herman Guill, is stationed at Camp Pickett.

Unpalatable Motorboat Wins Favor of Eskimos

You can't eat a pyrotelerak. If things get really bad in Eskimoland, however, you can eat an umiak.

Despite this fact, the umiak, the large open boat of skins and driftwood which has served the Eskimo so well for centuries, is gradually being replaced by the pyrotelerak, or -motorboat. Translated, pyrotelerak means "smelly, smoke-propelled boat," says the National Geographic society.

The pyrotelerak, plying Greenland waters in increasing numbers, caused a Danish official recently to lament that "modern technique is outdistancing the national, the interesting, and the picturesque" among Greenland's Eskimos. At the other end of Eskimoland—in Alaska—the trend toward motorization started before the war. Bering Sea umiaks were fitted with outboard motors, thus combining the best of old and new.

For seaworthiness, resilient strength, shallowness of draft, ease of movement, and load carrying ability, few boats match the umiak. From small bushes growing along Arctic coasts and from driftwood washing ashore, Eskimos build a simple framework with little distinction between bow and stern.

Then, with sinew, they sew together skins—from seals, walruses, or white whales—and stretch them over the form while still wet. As the hides dry, they shrink to make a skintight cover.

Hornfly Costly Pest

Hornfly is one of the costliest of livestock pests. Cattle are its chief victims. In some instances, hornflies have caused a drop of one-fourth to one-half in the milk production of dairy cattle. The hornfly also causes loss of weight. The sores caused by hornflies also give rise to ifcreased screwworm infestation. Such sores often originate when cattle injure themselves by rubbing against trees, running through brush, or scratching against barbed wire fences in an effort to rid themselves of hornflies.

Now We Have Cattalo

First experiments in crossing buffalo and cattle were made a number of years ago. Buffalo bulls were crossed with domestic cows, but the calves had such tremendous heads and forequarters that most of the cows were killed in giving birth to them. Subsequently, domestic bulls were crossed with buffalo cows. Although the first hybrid "cattalo" calves proved sterile at maturity, cross-breeding has, at last reports, produced a species of cattalo that can reproduce its kind.
